Reproduction (including the binding) of the oldest manuscript (no.
10861) in the Moscow public and Russkoye museum, published in 1890 on the occasion of the museum's 25th anniversary. The manuscript contains an "Aprakos" (dictionary for Sundays and holidays) in the earliest Kiev dialect of the Russian language. There are some pages in the parts preserved and the manuscript lacks beginning and end from Easter to 87th week after Easter, and the lesson after 82.

Below title: 1 Cor. i. 30-31. N. B. The title letter was written in great privacy from one friend to another; yet on representing that by allowing it to be printed, it would probably reach to many others in the like afflicted case, and by the Grace of God be very helpful to them: the writer was at length prevailed on to suffer it—provided her Name and Place of abode remain concealed.

Osorio, Buenaventura Francisco de.

Astronomica, y harmoniosa mano: que con brevedad, y claridad dá, y perpetuamente señala en una sola letra de una coyuntura todas las fiestas, y demás dias movibles, que corren desde la septuagesima hasta el fin del advenio de cualquier año, preterito, presente, y futuro. Y juntamente con esta mano no solamente se enseña, que cosa sea aureo numero, epacta, letra dominical, y del martyrologio, ciclo solar, indiccion, calendas, y demás curiosidades, dignas de saberse, que aqui se contienen; sino que tambien se dá hecho todo lo dicho; de manera, que qualquiera lo podrá facilmente saber, y practicar. "This book is based upon an illustrated story of Lenin's life published in the soviet union some years ago under the title of 'Lenin for children' (Lenin's Childhood). A free translation was made and adapted for American children by Ruth Shaw and William Siegel. Harry Alan Potamkin, just before his death, revised the manuscript, incorporating material about Lenin's childhood which he gleaned from the reminiscences of Lenin's sister. While the story has been partly fictionalized, it adheres closely to the true events in the life of Lenin."—p. 6.
